A customer's complaint

Shops are full of attractive things to buy these days. But what are we actually paying for? I recently bought a large packet of chocolate biscuits of a brand I hadn't tried before. When I opened it, I found each biscuit was wrapped individually in paper, then they were wrapped together in more paper, and then packed in a strong cardboard box, which was in turn wrapped in plastic! By the time I had actually got at the biscuits, the table was covered in paper and I wasn't hungry any more. (This was probably just as well, as there were only eight biscuits in the packet). And children's toys are even worse. It was my three-year-old son's birthday last week and at first he was excited to see so many presents all for him. But at the end of the party, when he had finally got through all the wrapping paper, cardboard boxes and plastic bags that they came in, he was too tired to play with any of them. Some of them were so well wrapped that he never did manage to open them, and when I tried to do it for him, I broke my fingernails. I hate to think of the amount of money all of this costs-and who ends up paying? The customer, that's who!
